4. Summary of work completed in the reporting week *

During this reporting week, the team completed the full website wireframes and finalized the initial database design for the CanCook application. We created and reviewed the core database tables, including users, recipes, pantry items, grocery stores, and inventory. In addition, we outlined the complete API structure covering user management, recipe management, pantry operations, ratings and comments, searching and sorting, and grocery admin functionality. System requirements were clearly defined, including user roles, permissions, constraints,

5. Summary of work planned for next week *

In the next reporting week, the team plans to implement backend data seeding using Faker to generate realistic test data for users, recipes, pantry items, grocery stores, and inventory. This will allow us to validate database relationships and API behavior without relying on manual data entry. In parallel, frontend development will begin with the implementation of the login page using Next.js, including form
